

Abstract

A path for a linear motor system includes routing system between a trunk of the path and two or more branches. The routing system is operative to couple the trunk with a selected branch to enable a stage to travel between the trunk and the selected branch.

5 The routing system includes armature windings that may be energized to effect movement of the stage in a desired direction between the trunk and the selected branch.